BEDTIME TALES.

The Days When I Was Little Pele and You

The Days When I Was Little Pete an Were Brother Joe,

Carl Smith in Horper's Westly.

It used to be, long time ago,
In days of boyhood sweet.

When you were my high brother Joe
And I was little Pete,
That, when you took me up the stair
And stowed me into bed,
I turned, when I had "said my prayer,"
And "Tell a 'tory," said.

And you, old boy, what wondrous things You told, of talking hears.
And ponies that liew you wings.
And djinns with golden wares.
And princesses with allken gowns.
And Robin Hood's beld scamps.
And port of the wondrous with the second by rubbing magic lamps!

And soon that darkened room of ours
Became a fairy hall,
And everywhere were gorgeous flowers,
And diamonds ever all,
And glittering lights from stone to stone
+ E'er recemed to dart and leap,
And strains of music floated on;
And strains of music floated.

Ah, dear old boy, I can not hear.
These tales you told again.
That time is past now many a year,
And both of usage ment.
But memory comes and dwells with me
And visions rise to view.
And there are time I think I see
Those fairy scenes with you.

For there is one, a little tyke, Who, when the night is new, Commands that fairy aumy, like Illis papa used to do: And there beside his crib i greet Those scenes of long ago, When I, you know, was little Pete And you were brother Joe.

THE STOLEN DIAMOND

From the Spanish, Translated by E. J. Eagundus for

In Trouville, near Havre, about the end of August three people were assembled in a pleasant room overlooking a beautiful garden. They seemed to be discussing a subject of importance; they were a young man of about twentyfive, a girl of twenty, and the father of the latter, a man of about fifty.

"Why do we need riches?" asked Theodore, the young man. "Can they by chance maintain our happiness? by chance maintain our happiness? Anna and I would live very happily in a cottage, and the bread earned by my labor would be for us both sweet as ambrosia," Anna replied with a tender glance, which seemed very eloquent to Theodore, because it openly repeated that which the girl's heart had secretly told him many times. The father, who had a kind face, turned his head aside to hide a smile, then "My children, I might tell you many things which you would only use to repeat in your turn in vain to your children twenty years from now; till then you would neither believe them nor dren twenty years from now; till then you would neither believe them nor understand them; but as I love my daughter more than my life, and esteem him who desires to be her husband enough to confide her happiness to his care, I cannot consent to your union till-Theodore returns from the voyage that he is obliged to make under his employer's orders."

Theodore spoke slightingly of the profit which he would derive from this voyage, whose sole motive was commercial reasons; but Anna's father was inflexible, and the lovers were obliged to flexible, and the lovers were obliged to yield to what they considered an old man's whim.

"Good-by, Theodore," said Anna; "I shall pray Heaven, not that you return rich, but constant."

Theodore assured Anna with a loving glance that her wish would be granted, and a few days later he embarked. 11.

During the long voyage Theodore thought of the places which he was to visit, which were entirely new to him. The splendors of the Orient evoked by his imagination offered marvellous pic-tures; and little by little he formed an idea of the extraordinary luxury of the

But when they arrived in Constauti-nople his disenchantment was intense. In disgust at the difference between the reality and the descriptions, he resolved to think only of his beloved; and as the merchant whom he accompanied was to share the profits with him, he calculated about what he should receive and exclaimed: "Anna's father will be satisfied. I am now certain that nothing will interfere with our happiness!"

One evening, seated in his modest room with his elbows on the table and his head in his hands, he amused himself by arranging the expenses of his future home, discussing the grave question of servants, formed an interminable list of furniture which he considered necessary to adorn his house, and, not content with all this, even thought of how his belowed would look at the wedding, when suddenly two knocks at the ding, when suddenly two knocks at the door interrupted his agreeable task. He opened the door, and was not a little surprised at the entrance of a man who, after glancing around the room, turned and locked the door. Before Theodore could speak the unknown said:

"Sir, we have only ten minutes to make a bargain on which depends your fortune and my life."
"I do not understand you."
"Listen," replied his mysterious interlocutor. "I am a slave employed in the mines. I have stolen a diamond and, feigning illness, have succeeded in being sent here. No prince in the world possesses a stone so precious as this; but my diamond is a treasule uscless to me, because I am in need of money and without resources I cannot escape to sell it. So, you understand, less to me, because I am in need of money and without resources I cannot escape to sell it. So, you understand, I cannot hope for any benefit from it; and if you will give me enough to escape, the stone is yours."

"But—" stammered Theodore.

"Look at it and accept my proposition; it will make you rich and me happy, because it will assist me to return to the bosom of my family."

And the slave showed an enormous diamond to Theodore, who contemplated it with intense astonishment.

"Certainly," he said, "it is a magnificent stone. I have seen many of its class, but none so perfect nor so large. Any ruler would be proud to adorn his crown with it."

"Do not lose time; by depriving yourself of a few pounds you will be a millionaire and I will be happy."

"And if they pursue me?" observed Theodore.

"Pursue you! Who would suspect.

And it they pursue me? observed Theodore.

"Pursue you! Who, would suspect you? And then you can escape."

Theodore was in doubt, but at the slave was going, he took the diamond, and gave for it what money he had, then telling roots of his newtice for then, taking part of his portion from his employer, he also fied.

111. Theodore provided himself with a aneotore provided himself with a good guide and traveled by the most rugged paths, the more easily to escape any pursuit.

However, one day they met a band of thieving Arabs.

"Have you money with you?" they asked. "We have only enough for the jour-by," Theodore answered.

"We have only enough for the jour-ney," Theodore answered.

"Then do not offer any resistance; after scarching you, we will leave you enough to finish your journey."

"That won't do," replied Theodore, and raising his pistol, he discharged it at the first Arab, who fe!.

Other thieves came to the aid of their companions, and, after a fierce struggle, killed the guide and took Theodore prisoner; and, not-withstanding the fierce resistance which he made, they took possession of the diamond.

His great grief at losing it made the Arabs think that it was an amulet, and one of their women gave the stone to her child as a plaything.
After a time the Arab chief, becoming foud of the prisoner, told him that when his wounds were healed he would be free to leave them with all that they had taken from him.

So Theodore recovered with his health his diamond and his liberty.

health his diamond and his liberty.

Not knowing which way to go, he concealed himself in a cave, where he tomained two days, when a caravan appeared, which he joined, and was thus able to continue his journey.

Always worried and suspicious, he took the poorest accommodations in the inns and the cheapest food, so that no one might suppose he possessed a treasure. Near the end of his journey he wrote to Anna's father, and began his letter with this phrase:

"I am rich! immensely rich!"

This displeased Anna, who thought that Theodore should have written of more important things first; but she silenced her misgivings, concluding that his conduct was only another proof of his love for her.

his conduct was only another proof of his love for her.

However, the thought of the immense fortune of her lover robbed her of her natural light-heartedness; her father also was very roserved—not to appear covetous; and Theodore, considering that he would be conferring a favor by marrying Anna, gave himself the airs of a protector.

of a protector.

As they thus mutually were deceived, their first interview was cold and unsatisfactory to both.

A few days later Anna said to Theoonswered. "Thanks to my riches, we can now go to Paris and live in one of the finest palaces."

"Oh! I should have preferred our dear little house—our trees and our dreamed-of happiness, to all the palaces and riches in the world!"

IV.

Theodore went to Paris to see the royal jeweler, but the latter was absent and would not return for eight or sent and would not return for eight or ten days. So he employed the time in looking for a splendid house and furni-ture, and ornaments to correspond. He also ordered a carriage and a pair of magnificent horses. He soon found that he had a multititude of relations, who, till now, had not troubled them-selves about him.

When he entered a drawing-room his name caused a sensation, and people talked of the immense fortune he had made in the cast.

made in the cast.

He was well received everywhere. Mothers tried to attract him for their daughters, and the daughters decided that ne was very eligible.

Poor Anna was running grave risks Poor Anna was running grave risks of being forgotten. However, short-ly afterward the two lovers, now husband and wife, were living in the same little house of which Anna had so often dreamed.

When the court jeweler had exam-

When the court jeweler had examined Theodore's diamond, he said:
"Truly, it is admirable: However, I do not wish to possess it, for I do not deal in false stones. This is a splendid imitation, and it will not be difficult for you to sell it. Any jeweler will give you ten francs for it."

With those ten francs Theodore was able to regain Havre on foot. There he fortunately found a position, with a salary of twenty-five hundred francs a year, and shortly afterward he and Anna were married.
